LETTER FROM CAMBRIDGE, MASS.

Cambridge, Oct. 25.

To the Editor: A few days ago I was walking in the yard of Harvard College, and I chanced to see a man with a pail of whitewash and a brush in his hand. A portion of the wall was whitewashed, and I noticed that the man was about to begin on another portion. Wishing to see how he would manage the bricks and mortar, I waited for him to begin. He did not begin, but stood looking at the wall for a few minutes, and then went away. I thought it strange that he should whitewash a portion of the wall and then leave it, and I wondered what could be the reason. Afterward I learned that the wall was built of poor bricks, and that the whitewash was put on to hide the defects. Now, I am not sure that this is true, but I am sure that it is a very good story, and I am sure that it is a very good story because it is a story that I have heard told about Harvard College. Harvard College is a very good story. It is a story that has been told for many years, and it is a story that has been told by many people. It is a story that has been told by people who have never been to Harvard College, and by people who have been to Harvard College. It is a story that has been told by people who have been to Harvard College and have left it, and by people who have been to Harvard College and have stayed there. It is a story that has been told by people who have been to Harvard College and have left it, and by people who have been to Harvard College and have stayed there, and by people who have been to Harvard College and have left it and have come back to it. It is a story that has been told by people who have been to Harvard College and have left it and have come back to it and have left it again. It is a story that has been told by people who have been to Harvard College and have left it and have come back to it and have left it again and have come back to it again. It is a story that has been told by people who have been to Harvard College and have left it and have come back to it and have left it again and have come back to it again and have left it again.
